

Alejandro Solano
Alec Patton
Humanities
5.25.17

Jointly Shell

This unusually drill/unicorn horn/joint shaped shell will catch your eye if all you have been looking at have been boring shells. This shell looks like a horn that has been sawed off a unicorn and the tip also looks like it has been chipped off like a rock hit it. If you hold the shell really close to your eye, you can see tiny splashes of yellow-orange on the shell. You may also notice that the shell has 10 ridges if you feel the shell. If you also hold it horizontally and spin it, it looks like a drill used for mining. If you are a drug lover, unicorn lover, or even a miner, this shell is for you.